1 General Information

1.1 Introduction

The second Cabinet of Balkenende did not serve its full term and submitted its resignation on June 30, 2006, after which a new (minority) Cabinet (Balkenende III) was formed. This outgoing Cabinet consisted of CDA and VVD. New elections were held on November 22, 2006. This codebook provides information about the organization and design of the Dutch Parliamentary Election Study 2006 (DPES 2006) held both before and after this election, and about the contents of the associated data file. The DPES 2006 is the eleventh in a series of national election studies. Previous studies have been conducted around the parliamentary elections of 1971, 1972, 1977, 1981, 1982, 1986, 1989, 1994, 1998, 2002 and 2003.¹ Additional information about the DPES series can be found on <http://www.dpes.nl>.

The codebook consists of several parts. In this first part general aspects of the DPES 2006 are described. In the second part information about the research design, sample, and the response rates are presented. Part three, which is the largest part of this codebook, contains information about all variables in the various datafiles. Finally information about the outcome of the 2006 parliamentary elections is presented in part five. Additional information, including a full comparison of all the questions that were asked at every past DPES, can also be found on the internet: <http://www.dpes.nl>.

1.2 Funding

The Dutch Parliamentary Election Study 2006 has been a collaborative enterprise of the Foundation of Electoral Studies in The Netherlands (Stichting KiezersOnderzoek Nederland; SKON) and Statistics Netherlands. It was made possible by grants from the Dutch Organization for Scientific Research (NWO), the Ministry of the Interior and Kingdomrelations (BZK), the Ministry of Health, Welfare and Sports (VWS) and the Social and Cultural Planning Office (SCP). The University of Twente provided research support in the form of research time of the project directors. Statistics Netherlands (Centraal Bureau voor de Statistiek; CBS) contributed about half the costs needed for this project.

1.3 Organization

The Dutch Parliamentary Election Study 2006 was conducted by a team at the University of Twente under the auspices of SKON and CBS. The team from SKON consisted of Henk van der Kolk, Martin Rosema (study directors) and Kees Aarts (Chair of SKON), all associated with the University of Twente (UT). Statistics Netherlands was represented by Willem de Witte, Hans Schmeets, Marriette Vosmer, Frank Engelen and others. This team designed the study and the questionnaires. In 2006 the board of SKON consisted of: Kees Aarts (University of Twente, Chair), Paul Dekker (SCP, Tilburg University), Joop van Holsteyn (Leiden University), Jan Kleinnijenhuis (VU Amsterdam), Henk van der Kolk (University of Twente), Rob Eisinga (Radboud University Nijmegen) and Cees van der Eijk (University of Nottingham). The fieldwork of the DPES 2006 was carried out by Statistics

¹ A direct predecessor of the DPES was conducted after the 1967 parliamentary election. Unfortunately,

Netherlands (CBS). The interviews were conducted by CBS's own corps of interviewers.

1.4 Global Study Design and Fieldwork

The DPES 2006 consists of several parts: the first wave of interviews (consisting of two independent samples), the second wave of interviews, a self-completion questionnaire, a non-response project alongside the first and second wave and a stimulus project. The first wave of interviews was held during the six weeks before the elections on November 22, 2006. A first sample was interviewed in the final three weeks of October. A second sample was approached in the first three weeks of November. The second wave of interviews with respondents from both samples was held shortly after the elections. The self-completion questionnaire was left behind after the second wave interview and was to be filled in and send back by the respondent. A number of non-respondents of the first and second wave was approached by telephone or sent a written questionnaire. The stimulus project consists of a battery of questions regarding voting behaviour and (especially) turnout in a (non-political) CBS survey done right after the elections only. The data of this stimulus project are not part of the DPES and not described in this codebook. In 2006 there was no panel study based on the 2003 sample, because of the the contested quality of the 2003 sample and the costs.

1.5 The questionnaires

The questions in the questionnaires used in the first and second wave came from four different 'sources'. The first source is the so-called fixed part of the DPES. This part contains topics that are in principle included in all DPES's. This part includes variables which have been part of the questionnaire for several years (e.g. party choice, party adherence, issues orientations and candidate evaluations). The second source is the variable part of the DPES. This part contains questions proposed by the study directors and scholars in the field. Mostly these questions are part of specific research projects. In 2006 a number of scholars proposed questions for the variable part. Apart from proposals made by the study directors, about ten fully developed proposals were submitted. Several proposals were selected for inclusion. The third source consists of a variety of social and demographic characteristics, and is referred to as the background part. Both in the variable part and the background part the comparability with questions of the Comparative Study of Electoral Systems (CSES) was observed. These questions, which form the fourth source of questions, have been asked in a large number of other countries, which enables an international comparison of certain attitudes and behaviour. For additional information, see <http://www.cses.org/>

1.6 Data processing and cleaning

Data processing, coding, labelling and cleaning have been performed by Statistics Netherlands and the study directors. The coding of most variables was performed under the supervision of the study directors. The information on response and non-response was provided by Statistics Netherlands. Consistency checks have been performed and incorrect data entries have been corrected when it was possible to establish unequivocally that the interviewer or the coder had made a mistake in recording or coding the answers.

1.7 Added variables

The dataset of the Dutch Parliamentary Election Study 2006 does not only include the answers to the questions in the questionnaire, it also contains;

- (1) Coded verbatim answers. The original text of the answers (in Dutch) is contained in the data file.
- (2) Indexes. Information about scales and coding schemes are also documented in together with the variables in this codebook.
- (3) Background variables based on other sources available at Statistics Netherlands. These variables serve to “enrich” the dataset.
- (4) Variables related to the type of interview, the length of the interview, etc.

1.8 Privacy protection measures

Several variables have been excluded from the public data file presented in this codebook in order to protect the privacy of individual respondents. Examples are the exact age, municipality, zipcode and the regional newspaper a person is reading. These variables are available for scientific purposes. CBS can also provide detailed information about non-respondents.

1.9 Additional information that can be found at the Statistics Netherlands

In addition to the excluded variables, the NKO file can be connected to variables currently available in the SBB files. These datafiles included detailed and additional information about the household of the respondent, income size and income sources of the different household members, levels of education, neighbourhood and municipal characteristics etcetera. Like the data is excluded from the datafile for privacy protection, the data can only be accessed through Statistics Netherlands.

2 Sampling Information, Response and Design

2.1 Research Design

The global design of the DPES 2006 is summarized in Figure 2-1. All boxes in this figure represent a set of variables.

2.1.1 First wave, two samples (CAPI)

The Dutch Parliamentary Elections Study is based on a sample of 4000 persons. The sample was split into two (random) sub-samples of 2000 persons each. The first sub-sample was approached in the period of 10-31 October, the second in the period of 1-21 November. The approaches were evenly distributed over these two periods of time. These persons were all approached at their homes. A total of 2623 respondents were interviewed during this first wave (see for response information section 2.3.2). This is excluding the 19 interviews that were aborted (are not included). These interviews were conducted using an electronic questionnaire (Computer Assisted Personal Interviewing; CAPI).

2.1.2 Second wave and drop-off questionnaire

The second wave of interviews started on November 23rd, 2006. The last interview was held on January 4th, 2007. The goal was to interview as many people as possible shortly after the election. In this second wave 2359 respondents of the first wave were re-interviewed. They were visited at their homes and interviews were again conducted with an electronic questionnaire with questions that were largely different from the questions asked in the first wave.

At the end of the interviews of the second wave a self-completion questionnaire was handed over to the respondents. They were asked to fill in the questionnaire and return it to the fieldwork organization. The drop-off questionnaire was returned by a total of 1,895 persons.

2.1.3 Non-response interviews (CATI and PAPI)

To raise the number of responses on some central survey questions and to increase the accuracy of the outcome, a number of the non-respondents from the face-to-face approach (refusals and no contact) were re-approached. There were 1159 non-respondents in the first wave and 264 in the second wave, excluding the administrative non-response (125) and mistakes in the sample (80) (see Table 1). Non-respondents with a phone were contacted by phone. Non-respondents without a phone or the ones that could not be contacted by phone received a written questionnaire. There were separate questionnaires for the first wave and the second wave, both containing some of the central questions of the face-to-face questionnaires. The telephone questions are referred to as CATI-questions and the written questions are referred to as PAPI-questions, but are essentially the same. Respondents of interviews by phone in the first wave were also contacted by phone for central questions of the second wave. Respondents of the written questionnaires in the first wave also received written questionnaires of the central questions of the second wave.

A total of 183 initial non-respondents of the first wave were interviewed. These initial non-respondents were also interviewed in the non-response project of the second wave plus a number of the non-respondents of face to face approach of the second wave. A total of 162 respondents were interviewed this way.

2.1.4 Data on full non-respondents

Data on background characteristics of the full non-respondents are available at Statistics Netherlands.

2.2 Sampling and sampling frame

For the sampling Statistics Netherlands (CBS) conducted a two-stage procedure. In the first stage the primary units (municipalities) are selected. Municipalities were selected with unequal chances in proportion to the number of persons in the municipalities in question. The largest municipalities, including Amsterdam, Rotterdam, The Hague and Utrecht, were automatically included in the sample. Persons within the selected municipalities are selected with an equal chance. This way a self weighing sample comes about, with a preset sample size. In the DPES the number of persons to be selected in every municipality was 12.

By law, all Dutch residents are required to be registered in the Gemeentelijke Basis Administratie (GBA). The GBA is pretty accurate, although in Amsterdam, research has shown that in 2006 about 15% of the actual population is inaccurately described in the GBA.² In smaller municipalities, this percentage is probably lower. Some other cities have reported considerably smaller percentages. The GBA is also used as the voting register. The GBA is in the Netherlands by far the best sampling frame that can be used for an election study.

More sample persons need to be selected than can actually be approached. In the first stage normally 6% of the samples fall out. That is why in first instance two portions of 2247, so 4494 in total, persons were selected (table 1). 187 fell out because they did not have the Dutch nationality. A total number of 66 persons were removed, because they were included in another CBS-sample in the last year. Also persons that belong to the institutional population (58) and persons for whom the municipalities do not provide name and address data (52), are left out of the sample. Finally, 11 persons are excluded from the sample that live in areas where the CBS does not conduct face-to-face interviews. These are areas in the Bijlmer (Amsterdam) and the islands Vlieland, Terschelling, Ameland, Schiermonnikoog and in the case of the DPES also Texel.

The refusals and no-contacts of the original study were also approached by phone. Of three quarter of the original non-response a telephone number is known. The rest was approached by mail.

2.3 Response and non-response

One of the goals of the DPES 2006 was a high response rate. Recent achievements of Statistics Netherlands in this area were one of the reasons for choosing the cooperation between SKON and CBS.

2.3.1 Measures to reduce non-response

All the interviewers were trained in obtaining the cooperation of the respondents. For the benefit of the DPES all the interviewers received extra instruction during one day, and received specific instructions how to obtain the cooperation for this elections study.

In order to achieve a high response rate, respondents were carefully contacted. First, the respondents received a letter of introduction. Enclosed with this letter was a small set of stamps, since this has proven to be effective. The interviewers were instructed to visit the respondents 3 to 5 days after this letter was sent. Every respondent was visited at least once during the first half of the observation period of three weeks (see above). A card was left behind if the first three house calls were unsuccessful and the respondent was not present. After that, the interviewer tried to contact the intended respondent by phone in order to make an appointment for an interview. Meanwhile the interviewer kept visiting the address. An address could only be labelled as a definite 'no contact' after six idle visits.

To achieve the highest response rate possible, an appointment for the second wave was made during the first wave interview. These appointments were planned as shortly as possible after the election date, so the responses of the second wave were concentrated at the beginning of the fieldwork period. It was also preferred that the interviewer of the second wave was the same person as the one that conducted the first interview.

The actual sample was drawn shortly before the approaches in the first wave. Mistakes in the population/electoral register (GBA), however, could not be corrected. Respondents of the second wave interviews were asked to fill in a self-completion questionnaire. Persons that had not returned their questionnaire within one week, received a reminder with a new questionnaire and a reply envelope.

People who, despite the attempts to optimize response, refused to be interviewed, had no opportunity to do the interview, or could not be contacted, were approached with a short questionnaire by phone (CATI), or with a written questionnaire (PAPI). Every week a group of non-respondents was contacted. There were three attempts made to contact each non-respondent by phone. The phone calls were made at different times of the day. Every week a group of non-respondents without a phone received a short written questionnaire with a cover letter and a reply envelope. If they did not respond after eleven (first wave) or thirteen (second wave) days, they received a letter of reminder and a new questionnaire.

2.3.2 Response rates

The following tables contain information about the response and the non-response for the first and second wave of the study, the self-completion questionnaire and the response rates of the non-response study.

2.3.3 Quality of the sample of the main study

We can compare the sample with some known population characteristics in order to assess the quality of the samples. Table 6 contains the response rates of different sections of the population. The response rates are computed for different categories of age, sex, marital status, degree of urbanization, region and country of origin.

Younger people (18-25 years) and elderly (75+) respond slightly less often than other age groups. Men and women do not differ in their response behaviour. Unmarried people respond less often than married people and widow(er)s. The main cause of difference in response rates is country of origin. Non-western voters participate with 52% far less than voters descending from parents born in western countries (excl. The Netherlands) (70%) and voters born from parents themselves born in The Netherlands (73%). The response rate is related to the degree of urbanization; the response rate of areas with a very high level of urbanization is significantly lower than response rates in other areas. Persons in the western part of the country participated less than persons in other parts of the country.

The response rates fall equally among the various groups, when the response of the face-to-face interviews is taken into account only. The decrease in the response rate from the first to the second wave is larger for widow(er)s (7%) and the youngest voters. When only the response of the face-to-face interviews is taken into account, response rates show similar decreases in all groups. Finally, the response rate of the drop-off questionnaire is particularly low in the younger age groups.

It has to be noted, however, that the aforementioned characteristics of voters hardly explain the propensity to participate in an interview.

2.3.4 Correcting for non-response; weights

To correct for (partial) non-response several weights have been created (wgt1 upto and including wgt8 in the datafile). The main difference between the various weights is the type of respondents included in the construction of the weight (only those participating in wave I, those participating in the CAPI interviews of wave I and wave II, all respondents participating in wave I and II (including the respondents interviewed by telephone or mail questionnaire) or only respondents participating in all three waves) and the inclusion of turnout (yes or no).

The weighting procedure has been carried out using Bascula⁴, using linear weighting as the weighting method. Linear weighting produces a set of weights that are minimally adjusted from the inclusion weights according to a quadratic criterion, while matching the population totals of the background variables is used in the linear weighting model.

In line with a model used for the DPES in 1971-1998, following characteristics were considered for inclusion.⁵

- Gender (M/F);
- Age (18-24; 25-34; 35-44; 45-54; 55-64; 65-74; 75+);
- Urbanicity (very high, high, medium, low, very low);
- Region (North, West, East, South);
- Marital Status (married, divorced, widow(er); never been married);
- Voting behaviour (not-voted; PvdA; CDA; VVD, GL; SP, CU, D66, other);⁶

For the DPES 2006 two changes were applied to the previous model:

- Turnout (voted/ not-voted) was included instead of 'voting behaviour' as the party choice in the sample mirrors very closely the distribution according to the election result;
- The 'Country of origin' (native; western ethnic minorities; non-western ethnic minorities) was included, in particular non-western ethnic minorities were underrepresented in the sample.

The largest weights (above 5) were assigned to non-voting non-native eligible voters.

3 Documentation of Variables

3.1 Guide to the documentation of variables

All variables in this section are documented in the same format. Several types of information are distinguished. In the example each type is represented by means of a small printed number. Because none of the variables contained all types of information we added empty cells and information not referring to this specific variable.

With this, 1 means very undesirable and 7 means very desirable.

Dan zou ik u nog wat willen vragen over de toekomstige regering. Zou u mij kunnen zeggen in welke mate u het wenselijk of juist onwenselijk vindt dat partijen samen de nieuwe regering gaan vormen. We beginnen met het CDA en de VVD. Kunt u op een lijn van 1 tot en met 7 aangeven hoe wenselijk of onwenselijk u het zou vinden als CDA en VVD samen een nieuwe regering vormen. 4 Outcome of the 2006 parliamentary elections

The 2006 election outcome was characterized by the loss of the three big parties and the gain of some of the smaller and new parties, including the remarkable gain of the SP. The PvdA suffered a dramatic loss of 9 seats. The governing parties CDA and VVD lost 3 and 6 seats and didn't have a majority among them to continue their coalition, although the CDA did manage to stay the largest party in Parliament. Something remarkable happened at/ within the VVD, where for the first time in Dutch parliamentary history, the number two of the list, Rita Verdonk, received more votes than the number one, Mark Rutte. The former coalition partner D66 went from 6 to 3 seats. The SP was the big winner of the election as it went from 9 to 25 seats and was now the third party in Parliament. The ChristenUnie managed to double their seats from 3 to 6 seats. The new right-wing party Groep Wilders (PvdV) managed to get 9 seats, which was a surprise, as this was not predicted in the polls which were held prior to the elections. The LPF, which had a new start under the name Fortuyn lost all of there eight seats and didn't return in the Second Chamber. The other right-wing parties (EénNL and PVN), which were in part (fact) separations of the LPF, also did not manage to get seats. GroenLinks went from 8 to 7 seats and the SGP returned in Parliament with a stable number of 2 seats. In 2003 the Partij voor de Dieren (Party for the Animals) just fell short to get in Parliament, but in 2006 it managed to get 2 seats.

A total of 9.854.998 voters cast a vote during the 2006 Parliamentary election. This is 80% of the electorate. This was the highest turn-out since 1989.
